Barbara Ann Meyer

Barbara Ann Meyer, 85, passed away on January 26, 2022, in Round Rock, Texas. She was a devoted and beloved wife, mother, and grandmother, with a passion for politics, gardening, and books.

Barbara was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on October 29, 1936. She graduated with a B.A. in anthropology from the University of Minnesota in 1958, and went to work as director of education at the Science Museum of St. Paul. In 1966, she married her college friend and fellow anthropology major George Meyer. His work for the Red Cross brought their young family to Oklahoma and then to Austin, where they decided to grow

As the mother of a child with developmental disabilities, Barbara was deeply committed to improving opportunities for people with disabilities. In the 1970s, she served as one of two parents on a special study committee to write legislation ensuring education for children with disabilities. This work resulted in extensive revision of the Texas Education Code and earned her a "Volunteer of the Year" award from the Texas Association for Retarded Citizens (ARC). At the Austin ARC, she served as program director for Pilot Parents, a peer counseling program for parents of children recently diagnosed with developmental disabilities, and later took the helm as executive director.

Over her lifetime, Barbara maintained a keen interest in antique books and paper ephemera, which she collected ardentlv. Her hobby took a professional turn as she became a book dealer and then owner/manager of Southwest Book and Paper Shows, promoting (with her husband George) book sales in Austin, Dallas, Houston, and New Braunfels, which drew dealers and collectors from around the nation.

In 1989, she and George purchased an historic home in Georgetown, Texas, which had fallen into disrepair. With considerable vision and hard work, they restored the home to its glory, a collaboration that they enjoyed for the next 25 years. One of Barbara's greatest joys was her garden, and she devoted countless hours to tending and learning about plants. Barbara also developed an appreciation for local history, serving as a board member of the Williamson Country Historical Commission and the Georgetown Neighborhood Association, and as a volunteer with the Georgetown Heritage Society. Sharing her passion for books, she volunteered for many years at the Georgetown Public Library.

She is survived by her husband, George, sons, Dana (Andrea) and John, daughter, Elizabeth (Armond Gauthier), and grandchildren, Pearl and

Tudor time tea tarts

ast week's "tea time" column inspired this one. Tastes of the Town reader Regina McFarland sent The Original Maids of Honour written by Bruce Richard-

"I found the article and recipe in one of my old Tea Time magazines," she wrote. "I thought you might be interested if you didn't know about these little tarts

"I don't bake or cook much these days," she explained. "But I enjoy reading about food and recipes, especially if they have an interesting history. I always enjoy your articles in the Sun as well."

Thank you Ms. McFarland for your kind compliment and for the interesting article.

Maids of Honour are a tea time treat with a royal history. Henry VIII provided the name for cheese tarts enjoyed by Ann Boleyn and other "maids of honour." It seems the king wasn't good at sharing since he locked up the recipe in a metal box. Eventually, the secret instructions were disclosed to a nearby bakery.

The first Maids of Honour shop opened in the early 18th century in Richmond just down from the present site. Bow-front windows displayed cakes, cream horns and tarts. Afternoon tea is taken in the dining room.

"This is not the Ritz," Richardson advises.

The menu includes country tearoom favorites such as steak pie, pastries, sausage rolls and "tall, dusty scones served with lashings of real clotted cream and jam."

Richardson goes on to write "this is British comfort food accompanied by a scalding hot pot of oversteeped black tea meant to be tempered with milk from the pitcher set before you."

He concludes his article saying the staff will tell visitors about the history of the shop but don't ask about the recipe.

"They are still very tight lipped about their namesake delicacy."

I enjoyed watching the challenges of making Henry VIII's treats on The Great British Baking Show. The popular program from across the pond has really taken off in America. Talented amateur bakers facing off in a 10-week contest without cut-throat competition or monetary incentives is both relaxing and refreshing.

lenged the bakers to make 12 Tutor treats good enough to satisfy the insatiable appetite of Henry VIII. Judges wanted a "flakey rough puff pastry" filled with a layer of lemon curd and a layer of "silky smooth, well risen cheese curd". A powdered-sugar Tudor rose was to be stenciled on top.

The bakers fumbled badly and results didn't merit the name Maids of Honour, but it was all good fun and shouldn't discourage anyone from attempting to make the tart fit for a king. The following recipe is from Richardson's article but other recipes can be found online. Some recipes call for curd cheese which is different from cottage cheese and harder to find. Some use ricotta or low fat cream cheese.

Maids of Honour

Yields 16 tartlets ½ pound rich shortcrust pastry, cold 4 ounces cottage cheese 3 ounces butter, softened 2 large eggs, beaten 5 tablespoons brandy ½ cup sugar 3 ounces cold baked potato 1/4 cup ground almonds ½ teaspoon grated nutmeg 2 tablespoons fresh lemon zest 3 tablespoons fresh lemon juice Preheat the oven to 350°.

Grease 16 patty tins. On a lightly floured board, roll out pastry to a 1/8 inch thickness. Using a 3-inch cookie cutter, cut 16 rounds from the pastry. Line the tins with the pastry rounds.

In a mixing bowl, combine cottage cheese and butter. Beat well with a mixer at medium speed. Add eggs, brandy, and sugar. Beat once again.

In another mixing bowl, combine potato, almonds, nutmeg, and lemon zest and juice. Beat well. Gradually add cottage cheese mixture, beating thoroughly. Divide the filling among the prepared patty tins.

Bake until filling is set, 25 to 35 minutes. Remove from the oven, and let cool in the tins for 10 minutes before carefully lifting onto a wire rack to finish cooling.

Black History Month at the library

February is Black History Month, and the Georgetown Public Library is honored to partner with the Georgetown Cultural Citizen Memorial Association to offer a Black History Month Art Exhibit featuring more than 30 works of art by eight different artists. The exhibit lasts through February 27 in the library lobby.

The exhibit features paintings, digital art, photography and more by eight local artists: Norma Clark, CamD, Carson Durden, Malcolm Joshua Elmore, Kemi Yemi-Ese, Mariah Le'iStell Howard, Nyree Sylvia and Glenn Towery.

One highlight of the exhibit was a panel discussion featuring several of the artists and a reception on Sunday. During the panel discussion, artists shared information about their creative work. The event was a great chance to meet new artists and enjoy refreshments.

Also in February, the library hosts My Favorite Place: A Photography Exhibit by Karen Limbaugh. The exhibit opens February 22, with a reception on February 25 from has traveled.

"Of course, I enjoy seeing the iconic sites that most people go to see," she said. "However, I like to find the less popular places and my photos reveal some of the additional hidden treasures I see....My favorite place is always the place where I am taking photographs at that moment."

And in March, the library will welcome a new exhibit by members of the Sun City Clay and China Club called Ageless Pottery and Ceramics. The show will be March 2-26, with a reception on Friday, March 4, from 4-6 p.m. The exhibit and the reception will be in the first floor lobby.

As always, we have a lot going on, and a lot of great artists sharing their work with the community. See you in the library!
