Summer reading programs start for everyone

Summer Reading Programs (SRPs in public library jargon) are big — big in attendance, and big in fun as well.

Local musicians and magicians court libraries for the chance to perform. How librarians manage their young patrons' reading logs is a conversation topic at meetings.

The Collaborative Summer Library Program sets a theme for each year's SRP. This year's theme is "A Universe of Stories." The Georgetown Public Library has dreamed up space-related activities for all ages to encourage reading and engagement over the summer.

All SRP events are free and open to the public. But due to the popularity of the programs, we no longer accommodate camps and youth programs at any age level.

The adult SRP for ages 18 and up kicks off on June 12 with a screening of The Farthest, a PBS documentary about the creation of Voyager 1, which left our solar system in 2012 and ushered humanity into the interstellar age. Then we'll host an indoor planetarium featuring several sessions of a half-hour show about our galaxy on July 10. The final event is a space-themed party with crafts, a photo booth, food and the announcement of prize winners from our summer challenges on August 14.

Adult SRP participants can sign up online at bit.ly/GPLASRP or pick up a list of challenges at the library. Challenges include checking out a recommended nonfiction or fiction book on a space-related subject and attending an adult SRP event. Completing three challenges qualifies you to enter a drawing for a Kindle Fire, reusable water bottle, phone galaxy grip, reusable bag or travel mug.

Now on to what you might typically think of — SRPs for kids, tweens and teens. Challenges and prizes are a part of the summer for them too.

Teen challenges include bringing a friend to a library program, reading a newspaper, rereading a favorite book and more. Teens can win one of four themed prize baskets: Artist, Bookworm, Gamer and Otaku.

Kids and tweens can complete challenges including reading with a flashlight, doing something nice for someone and having a picnic.

Teens will be encouraged to log reading times in 30-minute increments and earn a ticket for every hour they read after submitting the log to the library. Kids and tweens will track their time in 20-minute increments. They receive a ticket for every hour they read and for every three challenges they complete. They can submit their tickets for chances to win prize baskets. The prize baskets are divided by age and include jump ropes, puzzles, art kits and more.

The kid, tween and teen SRP programs kick off the first week of June and continue through July. Baby and family storytimes will continue with some slight changes in schedule. Pick up brochures with schedules and more details at the library's Kids Desk or from one of the two library information kiosks in the lobby. All programs are also listed on the library's Calendar of Events and Facebook events.

Fiction contest seeks indie authors

Independently published Texas authors can now submit adult and young adult fiction for an author contest. The contest is part of the Texas Author Project, which is sponsored by the mobile library BiblioBoard and the Library Journal.

The project is designed to help indie-published authors increase their readership, as well as give libraries a chance to promote new works.

"This contest provides an excellent platform for indie-published authors to showcase their work and receive recognition," said Rebekah Manley, coordinator of the Texas Center for the Book.

Winners will receive

- $500 in each adult and young adult category
- inclusion in a digital collection of authors on BiblioBoard Library
- honors at the 2020 Public Library Association Conference in Nashville, Tennessee
- opportunities to promote the winning title at public libraries
- inclusion in a full-page spread in Library Journal, one of America's oldest and most renowned trade publications for library news

Each submitted book must be independently published, adult or young adult fiction, written by a Texas resident and available in either PDF or ePUB format.

The contest is accepting submissions through May 31. Authors can submit at indieauthorproject.librariesshare.com/texas.
