

Reading expands understanding of racist culture

Individuals, organizations and businesses everywhere are working to find ways to increase their awareness of the role race plays in the lives of people in the U.S. and specifically to address disproportionate levels of violence toward people of color. The killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis on May 25 was one in a long line of brutal events that illustrate the need for change in our institutions. One way all individuals can progress in their understanding and their ability to contribute toward a more just society is by expanding their minds and hearts through their reading and viewing choices.

To provide a starting point, last week I created an Adult Anti-Racism Reading List with a selection of fiction and nonfiction titles as well as a handful of important films from the library's collection. This is not a comprehensive list, but a representative one that includes works by Toni Morrison, Spike Lee, Ta-Nahisi Coates, James Baldwin, Michael Eric Dyson, Ibram X. Kendi and many more. Visit <https://bit.ly/gpl-antiracismbooks> to view the list.

Teen Librarian Melissa Mote created a similar representative list for teens last week. Her Teen Black Lives Matter list includes both fiction and nonfiction that will appeal to teens, with books written by Jason Reynolds, Kekla Magoon, Angie Thomas, Ibi Aanu Zoboi and many other authors who write specifically for young adults. Visit <https://bit.ly/gpl-teens-antiracism> to view the list.

Collaborative works by Sonia Colonna Mathis, Carson Mathis, Luna Mathis and Terra Mathis will be on exhibit in the Georgetown Public Library June 17- July 19.

onna Mathis. Sonia has a BFA in studio art from the University of Texas at Austin. She has had many solo exhibits before, but she has not had a show like this one. The pieces in this show are a variety of mixed-media collaborations between Sonia and her three children, all talented artists growing up in a household with a focus on art and creativity. Sonia describes the artists and their creative roles this way: Sonia Colonna Mathis, age 44, is mom. Carson Mathis, 16, is described by Sonia as the abstract expressionist in the group. Luna Mathis, 13, is the c, and Terra Mathis, 5, is the wild card. Together, they have spent many hours focused on art as a family, and every piece in this exhibit is collaborative in that the artists involved all take a role.

The exhibit will be accessible to all ages, with work done in a variety of materials, style and subject. Each piece tells a story, and an exhibit that showcases a creative collaboration between parent and child seems especially apropos during this time when children are away from schools, camps and activities, staying mostly at home with parents who are acting in new roles.

This exhibit demonstrates the way one family collaborates to blend the professional, the developmental, and the creative into their home life.
