Are you a collector, an artisan or an organizer? Do you own interesting historical or cultural items? If so, the Georgetown Public Library has several square feet of display space that may be of special interest to you.

Many public libraries have exhibit cases for community displays, and Georgetown's is no exception. Three in-wall glass exhibit cases are in the library's first-floor lobby, and a larger glass-encased rolling display case is on the second floor. All four cases are locked for security, and individuals and organizations can sign up to use them for a month at a time.

The display cases have hosted many kinds of displays by community members since this library building opened in 2007.

Handmade items that have been on exhibit include heirloom quilts, embroidery, stained glass pieces, wood carvings and knitted items.

Local individuals and organizations have created cultural displays about Passover and Hanukkah, Native American history, Hispanic heritage and Christmas. The cases have held Latin American textiles and Mayan pottery. Local nonprofit organizations — the Williamson County Museum, the Georgetown Festival of the Arts, Congregation Havurah Shalom, Brookwood in Georgetown, Daughters of the American Revolution and others — have all arranged displays on topics relevant to their activities.

Collectors of all kinds have displayed coins, gems and minerals, unusual cooking gadgets, decorative plates, painted eggs, china dogs, porcelain horses, tin cans, model trains, cameras, vintage uniforms, Russian nesting dolls, tea cups, space exploration mementos, crystal and varied WWII-era anti-Nazi materials featuring artwork by Theodore Geisel (Dr. Seuss).

Library displays can be entertaining, nostalgic, educational or artistic. Creating a display can be as simple as arranging your collection of items on the shelves, or it can include doing research beforehand, writing, printing and mounting interpretive labels and formatting educational information.

Think about what you own that is beautiful or interesting or funny, valuable or humble. Consider the subjects you know something about that you might like to share with others.

If you'd like to talk about creating a display, just call library assistant Gloria Powers at 512-930-3551.

Gloria is the staff member who schedules the display cases and she has several months open in 2019; she would love to hear from you.

See you (and your treasured collections) at the library!
