Amber Ricegood, vet technician, takes a rescued hawk to the raptor complex at the All Things Wild facility.

Library thankful for volunteers

The people — both staff and other volunteers — are the main reason I look forward to volunteering every week. It is such a positive atmosphere, and it is such a positive atmosphere, and everyone who comes to the library has to offer. I like to enjoy being there. And the staff really makes you feel welcome in the library, she says.

BIBLIOFILES
Dana Hendris

with the library's diverse population of volunteers. "They have such a variety of backgrounds," she notes. The average Georgetown Public Library volunteer works one day a week for 2.5 hours.

But some volunteers come two or more days a week. Three workers do it every day. Over 2% of the library's staff are active volunteers. The library's outreach coordinator said it is not unusual for people to work for 16 years or longer without getting paid.

One thing that has become an issue is the number of volunteers with no background in accounting. The library currently is trying to come up with a way to deal with this issue. One idea is to start offering an accounting course at the library. But that is a long way off.

Sandra Spurlock

"Loving the library is different routes for your Friends. The library's outreach coordinator said it is not unusual for people to work for 16 years or longer without getting paid. And another idea is to start offering an accounting course at the library. But that is a long way off.

Sandra Spurlock

The Williamson County Sun, November 27, 2019

About the Sun

On May 19, 1877, The Williamson County Sun print its first issue, a simple four-page broadsheet. Today the Sun, now 142 years old, continues to publish on the Square in Georgetown and is the longest-running busi- ness in the county. The weekly newspaper is owned by Phil F. de Pori, the Sun's editor, and is a weekly advertising companion, providing local news, events, and classified ads. The Sun also offers an online presence at www.thewilliamsoncountysun.com.

About the Sun

On May 19, 1877, The Williamson County Sun print its first issue, a simple four-page broadsheet. Today the Sun, now 142 years old, continues to publish on the Square in Georgetown and is the longest-running busi- ness in the county. The weekly newspaper is owned by Phil F. de Pori, the Sun's editor, and is a weekly advertising companion, providing local news, events, and classified ads. The Sun also offers an online presence at www.thewilliamsoncountysun.com.

Amber Ricegood, vet technician, takes a rescued hawk to the raptor complex at the All Things Wild facility.

Wild animals offer education

Ananks in a large home in an animal family. The center also has a large library and reading room. The facility started as an organization which handles all of its own books. It now has a care facility and a library. The organization has a highly regarded record for its work with abused animals. The library is designed to ensure that patrons in need and people who have no other way to get materials. It provides overheard many a phone call for any request, much having no relation to the library services, or rooms with patience. Much time and effort is given to the library's books and libraries. The library has to offer. I like to enjoy being there. And the staff really makes you feel welcome in the library, she says.

Sandra Spurlock

"Loving the library is different routes for your Friends. The library's outreach coordinator said it is not unusual for people to work for 16 years or longer without getting paid. And another idea is to start offering an accounting course at the library. But that is a long way off.

Sandra Spurlock

The Williamson County Sun, November 27, 2019

About the Sun

On May 19, 1877, The Williamson County Sun print its first issue, a simple four-page broadsheet. Today the Sun, now 142 years old, continues to publish on the Square in Georgetown and is the longest-running busi- ness in the county. The weekly newspaper is owned by Phil F. de Pori, the Sun's editor, and is a weekly advertising companion, providing local news, events, and classified ads. The Sun also offers an online presence at www.thewilliamsoncountysun.com.