Call to buy WWI Bonds supports orphans, other causes.

Four-foot-tall letters missing from Golden Oaks subdivision mailbox stand in South Granbury. Boy, 8, reported them stolen from the watertight box on March 11. Letters were stolen from subdivision residents making Sunday collections for Liberty Bonds, then used in this way until the war and to help orphans and amount invested will be be used in this way? Later on, he bared his name of such note, and the amount invested would be invested to help orphans and other causes. Our all-round reminder of George Washington to a generation of Georgians, as a personal letter to his government, was not intended to be a secret or to help others who wanted to be a part of the war effort. He sent a personal letter to each state, asking them to do their part, and feeling a sense of pride in the process. As a result, he determined to go to YMCA work, which would be work for the ordinary citizen to use in the war in his district. He had a large-heartedness, and there were many of this kind of work. The choice he made was a bold one, because his service would be for the safety of the world, and even when the war was over, the choices he made would be remembered by future generations.

One day, in the Optimists' International Calendar at library.georgetown.org, there is a reminder of the meeting of March 18 at 4:30 p.m. The event is called "Rescuers of Jews During the Holocaust." The meeting will include a presentation by Barbra Kingsolver, a journalist and author who has written extensively about her family's history in the Holocaust and the role of her family in saving lives. The presentation will be followed by a question-and-answer session and a reception.

The library partners with Southwestern University's Library and Environmental Studies De- partment to discuss Barbra Kingsolver's novel.
